Garage for Each Ship in British Navy.

MOTORING IS POPULAR

Benzine Wagons Will Probably Crowd Bicycle Stable From the Deck.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—The naval authorities have at last recognized the universal use of the automobile. The bicycle stable has long been a regular institution on board British battleships and cruisers, and now the men-of-war contain a motor garage.

In the flat space between the boiler-room bulkhead and the cook's galley plenty of room has been found in most warships to stack bleycles and several motor cars, and the boat derrick, which ists out a steam pinnace weighing fifteen tons, makes it a comparatively easy matter to land and reship the cars. Motoring is becoming increasingly popular in the service, and it is found quite a comfort to the officers to be ble to take their automobiles with them for spins on land. Motor-boating, too, is becoming quite a craze among naval officers, and at Devonport an ever-growing flotilla of petrol driven dingheys can be seen derties. dingheys can be seen darting about the port waters.

On the night of December 6, as the Atlantic Coast Line through freight, en route to Jacksonville, arrived within ten miles of Ocala, the engineer noticed a big black object walk on the track and then jump off again. When the train came within a few feet of the spot the object again jumped on the track. The engineer could not account for the object and did not stop to investigate.

The next morning the north-bound passenger train picked up a 400-pound black bear. This bear was turned over to the engineer of the freight train, who has had the skin cured and is keeping it.
